It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

I was talking to one of the archeologists one day during our lunch break and he asked those kinds of “getting to know you” questions you ask young people: Do you play sports? What’s your favorite subject? And I told him, no I don’t play any sports. I do theater, I’m in choir, I play the violin and piano, I used to take art classes.

And he went WOW. That’s amazing! And I said, “Oh no, but I’m not any good at ANY of them.”

And he said something then that I will never forget and which absolutely blew my mind because no one had ever said anything like it to me before: “I don’t think being good at things is the point of doing them. I think you’ve got all these wonderful experiences with different skills, and that all teaches you things and makes you an interesting person, no matter how well you do them.”

And that honestly changed my life. Because I went from a failure, someone who hadn’t been talented enough at anything to excel, to someone who did things because I enjoyed them. I had been raised in such an achievement-oriented environment, so inundated with the myth of Talent, that I thought it was only worth doing things if you could “Win” at them.”

I don't think Disney is aware that their movies look so much better in two dimensions magic-and-moonlit-wings Follow

That comment reminds me of another comment for which I can't recall the source; paraphrased, "The best CGI now will always look outdated ten years from now, but awesome drawings will always look like awesome drawings."

stachionalgeographic

Also it was...not the best CGI

shining-magically

The thing I hate most about Disney not doing 2D anymore is that the box office disappointment of Winnie the Pooh (2011) (which is adorable and hilarious btw if you've never seen it) is often pointed to as the final nail in the coffin

Y'all released a 1 hr and 9 minute cutesy collection of Pooh Bear short stories about trying to find Eeyore's lost tail on the SAME DAY AS THE FINAL HARRY POTTER FILM, of course it didn't do well

AND y'all went up against YOURSELVES because Cars 2 had just opened like three weeks before and was very much still in theaters

It was not the animation, it was never the animation

hella-marshmella

I think this was an issue for The Princess and the Frog too. Not only did it come out the same month as the 2nd Chipmunk movie (which is trash but it made double what TPATF did).

You remember what came out literally one week after it?

bisexualcrises Follow

Don't forget how Disney released one of their last 2D animated films of the era Treasure Planet on the same day as the first Harry Potter film and refused to delay the release even though they knew they would have made more money. They purposefully sabotaged their 2D animated films.

universejunction Follow

I've been re-watching all those Disney renaissance films, cause kids and Disney+ (don't @ me, it's easier than piracy), and yeah, the animation really holds up. Not so much with the 3D films (looking at you, Toy Story).

joyflameball Follow

Yes, the 3D films are technologically amazing. But it'll never hold a CANDLE to the blood, sweat, and tears people put into 2D animation. And as stated above: In ten years, that technologically amazing animation will look dated.

And if you think 2D animation can't look as good as 3D animation, there are 2D animated TV SHOWS that are on a lower budget than 3D animated movies that look fucking STUNNING. Let me list a few.

Even if the story isn't the best, Steven Universe's animation is really beautiful and has such a nice style to it. The gems, the weapons, all of it just looks gorgeous. And have you SEEN the Other Friends animation?

GIF by spinel-espinela

GIF by sushitsandgiggles

Gravity Falls's episode "Not What He Seems" aired five years ago, but it looks like it could have been animated today. The animation is absolutely stunning in every way. The lighting, the colors, everything. It's just beautiful.

GIF by mvpnoona

GIF by roguearchaeopteryx

And have you SEEN The Owl House's fight scenes? Those are entirely animated in 2D, but they're so smooth and gorgeous! They look ten times better than the fight scenes in a lot of 3D animated movies!

GIF by preciseprose

GIF by inasociety

And don't get me STARTED on the Tangled The Series animation. It's done entirely lineless, which is not easy, and it looks so good that there could be an actual camera recording it in real-time. I can't describe how amazing it is in words.

GIF by sideofwritingsandramblings

GIF by imgayandgirlsarepretty

These shows are going to be looked at in ten years and still marveled at for their absolutely beautiful animation. Meanwhile, 3D animated movies that look amazing now will be seen as looking horribly, horribly dated.

queenofthefaces

Since the first draft of my reply disappeared (thanks tumblr mobile) I'm going to try and summarize what I was saying before:

Basically, I think it's a bit unfair to try and completely disregard 3D animation as a tool and medium. I ABSOLUTELY agree that 2D animation deserves recognition and it's deliberate exclusion in mainstream movies by Disney is a MASSIVE disappointment and is REALLY shitty. AND I agree that 2D animation has a MUCH easier time holding up than 3D animation.

HOWEVER, when 3D animation works to its strengths, there are plenty of examples of 3D graphics that do still hold up.

In video games, for example: Super Mario Galaxy released in 2007, but still holds up, as does Jet Set Radio and Catherine (though still a little rough around the edges). There are also plenty of YouTube videos and articles you can find that give other examples as well

GIF by prosyscomtech

GIF by oceancyclonesuplex

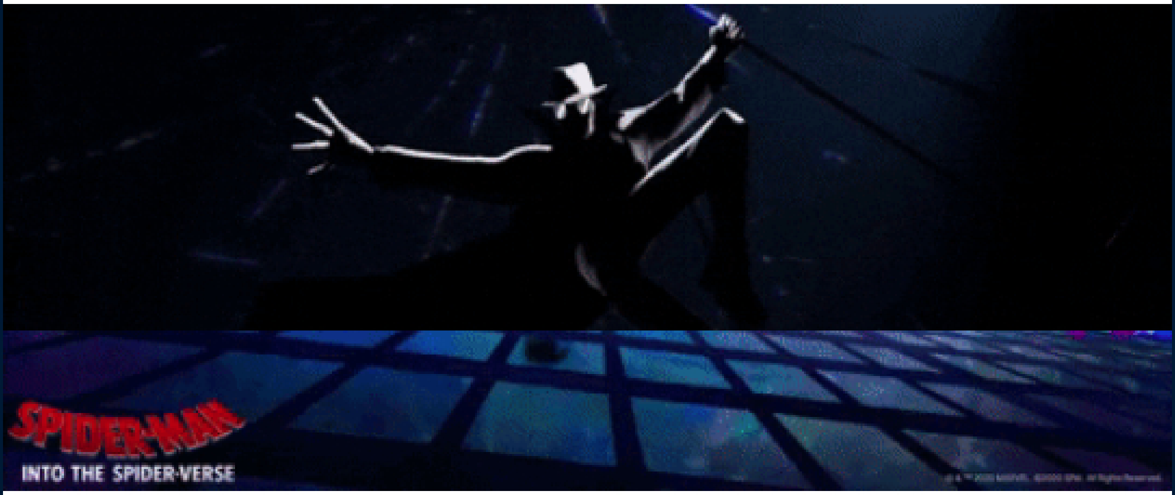
For movies, I can see films like Spiderverse, Trolls, and Captain Underpants having a good chance at holding up in the future. They focus more on creating a unique visual style that fits their movie and are very stylized!



SPIDER-MAN
INTO THE SPIDER-VERSE

GIF by samuelantonioroncalminano

GIF by trollstale

GIF by thetinyshipper

And even older 3D movies like Shrek and some of the Barbie movies look pretty good still, despite being almost or over a decade old at this point

GIF by breathingchicken

GIF by genuinesmile

Additionally—there's recent examples of 3D and 2D animation being used TOGETHER for absolutely fantastic results, like in Land of the Lustrous or Promare

GIF by thechimeraoblivion

GIF by mobpsycho100

The main issue with 3D animated movies (+ video games) now is that plenty of companies care more about making a product that will work IN THE MOMENT, instead of trying to create something that will last. So hyper-realism, new technological marvels, and established tropes (like Disney's sameface in its 3D movies) will be used in a shallow and easy to consume manner. It's about the spectacle, instead of using these things as tools, carefully and sparingly.

It's the same issue with CGI in many modern movies all but replacing practical effects. Plenty of these movies age like milk because they're trying so hard to look realistic, but their CGI is basically left to do all of the work itself, which isn't what it can really do. It should be used in tandem with other effects or stylized to mask the uncanniness (leaning into how not real it is instead of trying to trick the brain into thinking it is)

Jurassic Park is a well-used example of this. The film used a thoughtful combination of practical effects and CGI, working to the strengths of both to create a stronger whole.

Basically—I think it's a little unfair to try and pit 2D and 3D animators against one another. Both mediums require a TON of effort and skill for the animators! One is not inherently better than the other; they're just tools with different strengths and uses. Both mediums deserve to exist and to be used properly!

tazerpagan

^ I'm a hardcore 2d supremacist, but the problem with 3D isn't 3D. It's the industry (well, mainly Disney) stubbornly, bitchily refusing to be artistically adventurous

tarchey-reblobs

As a professional 3D artist I can't agree more with these last comments. It pains me to see everyone hating on 3D when it's so often the same people who are doing the animations and character designs and so on (not to mention that nowadays almost every 2D animation is produced in 3D, it's only rendeded in flat-design and stylized so that it looks Like 2D). The problem is that 3D software allows to produce stuff much more effectively (less time = less cost) and that industry will always abuse this for getting cheaper stuff when they could explore the new tools and develop new styles, just like they did in Spiderverse.

A vampire was trying to sneak up on my character from behind, but she (my character) rolled a 27 Perception and could tell they were there. Being at a fancy garden party, she couldn't just stab them. So, naturally.

She faked a sneeze and cast Fireball on the vampire.

Who failed their check.

And was immediately incinerated.

Finding love as a transgender person

Marianne Oakes has shared an amazing collection of transgender love stories over at GenderGP.

Here are a few of them.

Marianne Oakes
@OakesMarianne

Just sharing: I came out to my wife before we were married aged 19. Last December we celebrated 36 years of Marriage. Being trans does not stop us finding love, trans youth need to hear this, other couples need to hear this. Feel free to share your love story to help others, xx

Marianne wrote:

The myth that trans people struggle to find love is damaging to our future generations, if trans youth or worse still, their parents believe this, then the impact can be loss of hope. My experience is pretty much like all the lovely comments here, let's stop the myth, xx

Kelly & Zoey - Our Transitional Life
@our_trans_life

Replying to @OakesMarianne

After being married to my lovely wife Kelly for 10 years, I found the strength to come out to her. Now 15 months later, we are stronger and happier than ever before. We are closer and more connected than I could have ever imagined. This is all thanks to Kelly for being amazing.

More here!

These stories help so much. Not just because of the trans people find love just like everyone else, which is an important message on its own, but because there are some stories of other people who didn't know since they were kids and this is so fucking reassuring!!!

"You live like this, sheltered, in a delicate world, and you believe you are living. Then you read a book, or you take a trip, and you discover that you are not living, that you are hibernating. The symptoms of hibernating are easily detectable: first, restlessness. The second symptom (when hibernating becomes dangerous and might degenerate into death): absence of pleasure. That is all. It appears like an innocuous illness. Monotony, boredom, death. Millions live like this (or die like this) without knowing it. They work in offices. They drive a car. They picnic with their family. They raise children. And then some shock treatment takes place, a person, a book, a song, and it awakens them and saves them from death. Some never awaken."

no seriously i mean this actually. people will list their entire diagnostic histories in their little carrds out of fear that they'll post abt something and someone will come to them and say "hey you don't list that you're such and such, you can't talk about this" as if you have the right to judge ppls experiences in the first place; if someone posts a vent abt their chronic pain and your first instinct is to like check their bio and see if they list that they've got a health condition somewhere that "validates" their vent you should probably stop worrying about other people and get therapy or something

I grew up entirely removed from any and all religious influences so the concept of a god or a devil or heaven or hell are so new and abstract to me that I can't remotely wrap my head around what it's like to genuinely believe in such things, it's so far fetched to me that my brain categorized it to the same level of believability as fairy tales, so to see people react with such serious shock and indignation is just mind boggling to me does the mortifying ordeal of being known guy know that his paragraph from a six year old NYT opinion piece about emailing pictures of goats to coworkers has become God Tier Tumblr Gospel ? like does he KNOW though

areyougonnabe Follow

WOW thank you @inkstrangle for bringing it to my attention that as of last August, which is to say the chronological peak of the “mortifying ordeal” meme on tumblr, tim kreider absolutely DOES know and in fact wrote an entire brilliant essay reflecting on the phenomenon:

> But what I wish I could tell all those children of the internet, holed up in their rooms, isolated online, is that they can only imagine the worst of relationships: they think that what another person will learn about them is what they see in themselves — the squirming, icky, insecure mess inside. They don’t know yet that the ways in which they’re secretly screwed up and repulsive are boringly ordinary. The issue isn’t that you’ll be despised for who you really are — that, as a friend and I used to say about girls we were dating, “she’ll realize.” It’s scarier than that: it’s that you lose > control over who you are. Other people get to decide. And it may turn out that you're not who you thought you were.

> As an artist, you don't get to decide why people love your work. […] I would describe my reaction to seeing my writing reanimated as meme as "nonplussed," maybe "bemused." It always does some slight violence to a writer's intentions to yank a sentence out of its context and present it as if it were a complete, isolated thought, like a maxim or commandment. I am not in the business of pretending to be in possession of any wisdom, or of telling other people what to do: this is the realm of self-help and advice writers — in other words, of charlatans. Part of me worries it's an indictment of my prose that it should lend itself so well to Tumblr memes, the digital equivalent of needlepoint samplers. […]
> But the things people love about you aren't necessarily the things you want to be loved for. They decide they like you for reasons completely outside your control, of which you're often not even conscious: it's certainly not because of the big act you put on, all the charm and anecdotes you've calculated for effect. (And if your act does fool someone, it only makes you feel like a successful fraud, and harbor some secret contempt for them — the contempt of a con artist for his mark — plus now you're condemned to keep up that act forever, lest she Realize.) My last girlfriend found my flaws, the things that annoy even me about me, amusing. When you break up with someone, you don't just lose them, but a version of yourself. You don't even get to know what your children will remember you for; it probably won't be what you thought were the important moments. […]
> As The Velveteen Rabbit teaches, we don't become fully real except in other people's eyes, and in their affections. At some point you have to accept that other people's perceptions of you are as valid as (and probably a lot more objective than) your own.

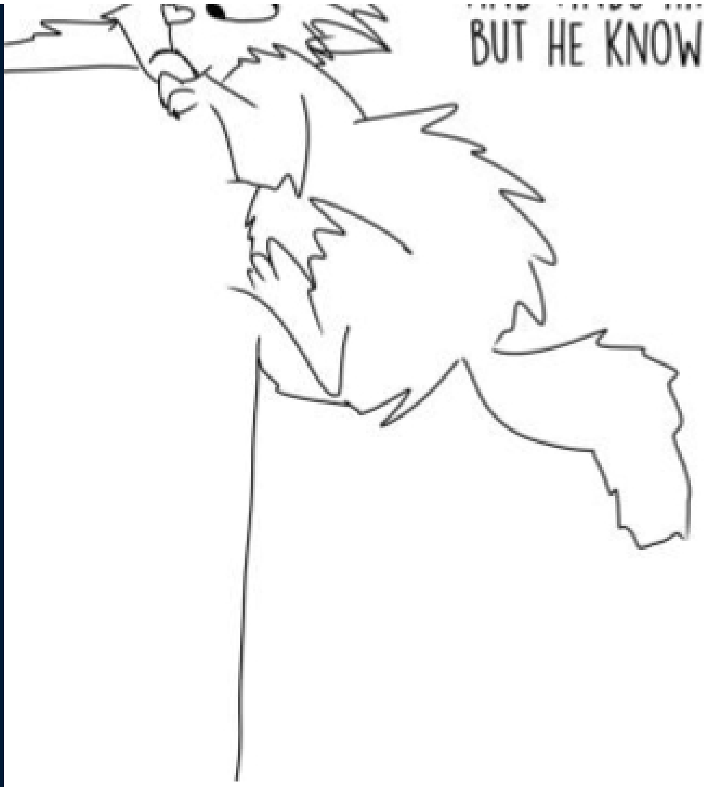
A PLACE I'VE PRETTY MUCH EXHAUSTED

AND FINDS HIMSELF IN TRICKY PLACES

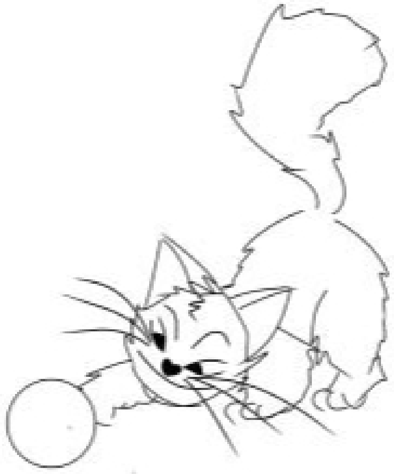
BUT HE KNOWS I'LL GET HIM OUT



HE TRUSTS ME
THAT WAY

HE LOVES PLAYING WITH BALLS AND STRINGS AND
AND EVERYTHING

SO I'M ALWAYS ON THE LOOKOUT FOR SOMETHING
HE MIGHT ENJOY



IT'S NICE TO HAVE SOMEONE EAGERLY WAITING FOR ME TO GET HOME

HE DOESN'T UNDERSTAND ENGLISH, SO I CANNOT SAY

"HEY, I'M NOT FEELING LIKE GETTING OUT OF BED, CAN YOU FIGURE IT OUT TODAY?"

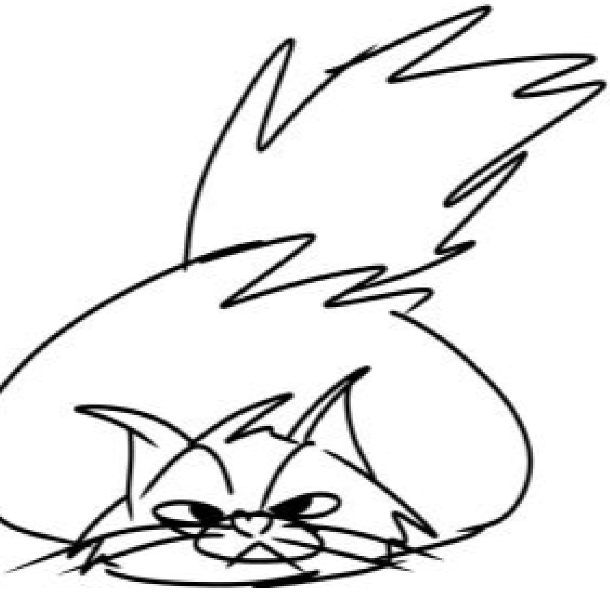
I HAVE TO FEED HIM, BATHE HIM, CLEAN HIS POTTY

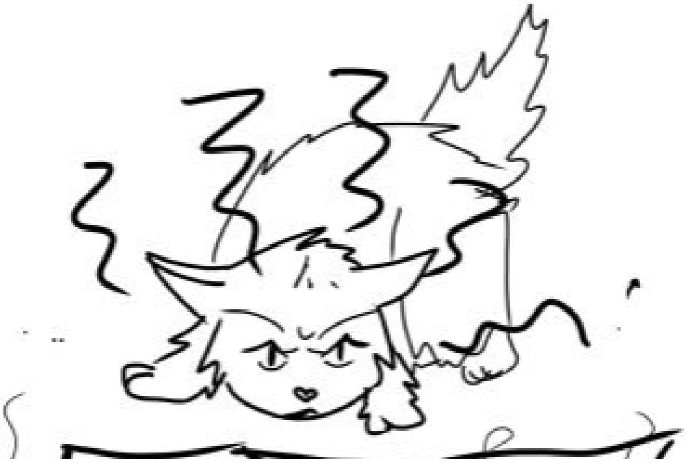
I HAVE TO TAKE CARE OF HIM

AND WHILE FEEDING HIM, I FEED MYSELF

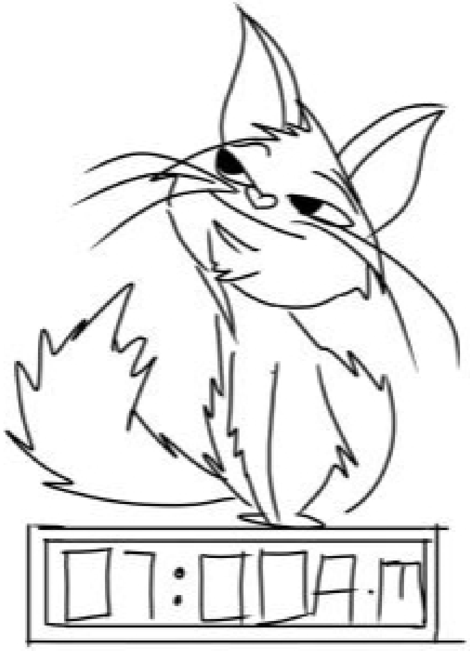


HE DOESN'T LIKE IT WHEN MY CLOTHES STINK

SO I HAVE TO DO MY LAUNDRY EVERYDAY

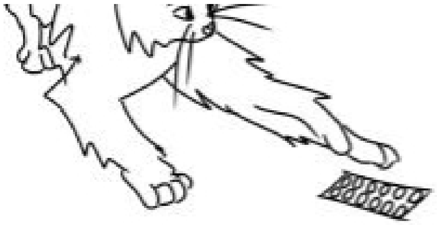


HE POOPS EARLY IN THE MORNING, SO I WAKE UP EARLY TO CLEAN HIM

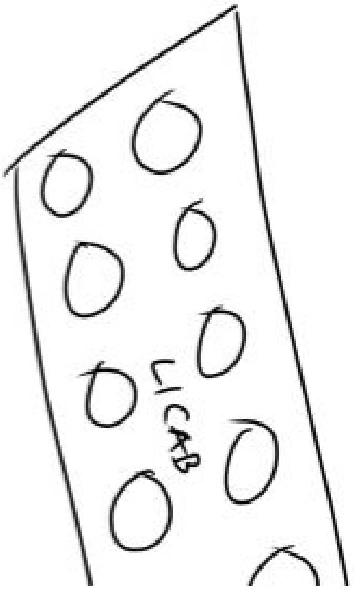


SO HE SHOWS ME THE SUNRISE EVERYDAY UNKNOWINGLY

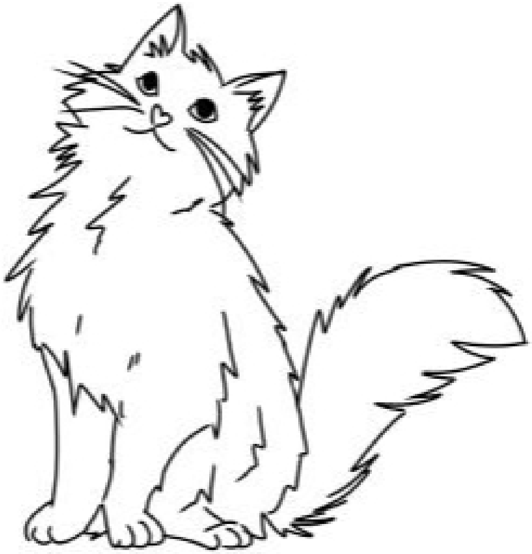
SOMEHOW TENDING TO HIS NEEDS



I LEARN TO TAKE CARE OF MYSELF



HE PATIENTLY LISTENS TO ME WHILE I RANT AWAY



AND I THINK HE'S BEGINNING TO UNDERSTAND ME

BECAUSE HE NEVER ASKS ME TO CHANGE
WHILE TAKING CARE OF ME

HE'S OKAY WITH ME

AND I'M LEARNING HOW TO BE OKAY WITH ME AS WELL

glumshoe Follow

"Invasive" means that it is both non-native to a particular ecosystem and causes measurable ecological/economic/health harm.

Dandelions are not considered invasive here in the Midwest. They are ultimately a net good, since habitat destruction has caused the loss of so many native spring ephemerals, and dandelions are one of the only early sources of food for pollinators and many herbivores. They're plentiful and difficult to get rid of, yes, but in most of their range they are considered neutral to beneficial. That could change as we learn more, and they are considered invasive in some places in the northwest.

The thing that gets me about most arguments against accessibility features in video games is that they're not just grossly ableist, they're also hypocritical as hell. Video games have always had accessibility features: we just documented them poorly and called them "cheat codes". Indeed, having a robust library of difficulty-modifying cheats was considered a mark in a game's favour! The only difference is that a cheat code is theoretically a secret, which allows it to be framed as elite knowledge, even though it's functionally identical to having an "infinite lives" switch on the options screen.

Here's a thesis for you: the Konami Code was the first well-publicised accessibility feature.

bog-dweller-official

being bad at video games is a disability now?

prokopetz Follow

I'm going to assume you're not being disingenuous here and take this as a serious question. In brief, very few people are generically "bad at video games"; in most cases, difficulty engaging with interactive media stems from one or more of a wide range of physiological conditions, including:

- visual deficit (including colourbindness; colourblind individuals often have difficulty identifying threats in action games because they don't stand out from the background for them)
- repetitive strain injury in the hands, wrists or forearms (common for anyone who performs manual labour for a living)
- arthritis and other degenerative joint conditions (both those due to age and those comorbid with many autoimmune disorders)
- dyslexia (a common symptom of even mild dyslexia is the inadvertent mirroring of sensory-motor responses under pressure, e.g., moving your hand left when you meant to move it right - which is a big problem for action games!)
- sensory processing disorders (delayed reaction to visual stimulus is a common symptom)

- spatial processing disorders (see above)
- chronic pain
- propensity for motion sickness

This is, of course, only a partial list. Many of these issues are individually rare, but taken together, we're looking a huge chunk of the population - up to 40%, by some estimates - who have at least one condition that would impact their ability to play the shooters and action-platformers that are held up as the gold standard for hardcore gaming.

bog-dweller-official

hot tip: if your disability makes you bad at a thing, maybe either put in the extra effort to get good at it or just don't do it instead of demanding people make the thing easier?????

prokopetz Follow

Here's the a better question: why is it an issue for you? Accessibility features in video games are entirely transparent to those who choose not to use them. Your experience of play isn't affected by their existence in any way whatsoever unless you deliberately turn them on. Complaining about the mere existence of such features is like claiming that your viewing experience of a movie is being ruined by the fact that the disc has a subtitle feature on it, even though you haven't actually turned subtitles on.

(And no, don't try to frame this as video game developers somehow being victimised by unreasonable demands. The vast majority of developers are more than happy to include accessibility features in their games - and quite sensibly, because, you know, they're businesspeople, and they want to sell things to as wide an audience as possible. The popular backlash against accessibility features is entirely on the player side.)

animeengineer Follow

That's pretty much the common American attitude toward disability. Or poverty. Or most social ills.

Just realised I never posted this short comic I made in 2019! Some of the art is a little wonky because I had to rush this out in a couple of weeks for a zine fair I was attending. I think my digital art skills have improved a bit since then.

I'm not the first person to suggest that cats are staring at something we can't see when they stare into space but I thought it would make a fun comic idea. This was also inspired by a picture book I read a lot as a kid- Slobcat by Paul Geraghty, which had a similar narrative style though obviously without the horror elements.

Thanks for reading! If you enjoyed my comic please consider supporting my work by buying something from my store or donating via Ko-Fi!

- Why does 'yellow filter' keep popping up in American movies?
- Yellow Filter: A cinematic technique or pushing stereotypes?

TL;DR: American-made films and shows have the tendency to tint scenes yellow as a means of conveying the location as impoverished and/or primitive. It is most typically used on Mexico, Central America, Southeast Asia, Western Asia and North Africa.

For those who don't know what's happening in the video, she untied her shoelaces, pulled one through the inside of the zip tie binding her hands, then tied the shoelaces together. Then, by pulling downward and back and forth on the shoelaces with her feet, she created enough friction to wear away part of the ziptie, making it weak enough to snap right off her hands.

It's all about quick, determined movement of your arms. To see it in action, watch the video at https://youtu.be/0Gr6HX_IKpw?t=9m – the zip ties part starts around the 8:00 min mark. The video also shows how to escape handcuffs and duct tape. And if you're wondering what to do when you've got your hands behind your back, go to approx. the 0:20 min mark of the following video: "Moving cuffs from behind back to front position" (taken from thrillwriting.blogspot.de/2013/05/credit-wikipedia-disclaimer-this-is-non.html, where you'll also find additional information on how to escape handcuffs).

I know exactly how that shit lit up. See the smoke coming from the stack when he's lifting? That's the hydraulic pump working, and it's working hard judging by the smoke. Runs hot even when it's working normally. Probably been running extra hot for weeks. Probably the oil cooler shit the bed ages ago. Probably been running hot for so long that seals failed. Hydraulic tank probably losing volume because of it, getting hotter and hotter because there's less oil to take the heat, losing oil pressure and viscosity and making that pump work harder and harder. Probably it's someone's job, at probably 18 bucks an hour, to check on that.

Probably didn't happen.

's what happens when multinationals understaff, underpay, and undertrain the workers directly in harm's way. Shit like this happens every day, but you the viewer get to see it here. Looks wild and scary and funny doesn't it? just don't think too hard about how thin the safety margins really are in heavy industry, because you won't sleep.

Autism: which symbols?

Most people within the Autistic community have strong preferences (with good reason) about particular symbols associated with autism.
How do you get it right?
Remember that autistics' preferences take precedence over neurotypical allies'.

Here's a quick guide:

Autistic Self-Advocacy Network (ASAN) by autistics for autistics	Autism Speaks Does not speak for autistics Regarded as a hate group by the autistic community
Neurodiversity designed by autistics to represent the diversity of the autistic spectrum	Light It Up Blue Autism Speaks' genderised manipulation of World Autism Awareness Day
National Autistic Society (UK) Not perfect but does listen to autistic voices and encourages acceptance	Puzzle piece Old symbol for autism Widely rejected now by the autistic community
Autistic Pride Official Autistic Pride flag Autistic Pride Day: June 18th	Autism Awareness Awareness not acceptance Autistics reject the puzzle piece

#as a professional animator i have answers#‘why do so many animated hugs look like the coldest#most uncomfortable embraces ever’#BECAUSE ITS REALLY HARD#in traditional disney animation usually one animator animates one character#and the other animator animates another#so two artists have to coordinate#in 2D rig#its one animator#but the two rigs have to be animated back and forth in their separate builds#in 3D#animators have to worry about frame by frame clipping and CLOTHING physics#that are handled by another department#who often have to troubleshoot on their end or send it back to animation#meanwhile at Ghibli#they’re insane#and the animators i think handle the whole scene themselves#if the two character are on the same piece of paper that's also fucking crazy#because if you think about it one character has parts that are overlapping and underlapping another character...#arms going around#they're moving together at the same time#how do you do that on two or more layers in traditional animation - these insane people probably do it on one layer#shits hard you try doing it

Ranseur this is fascinating insight!

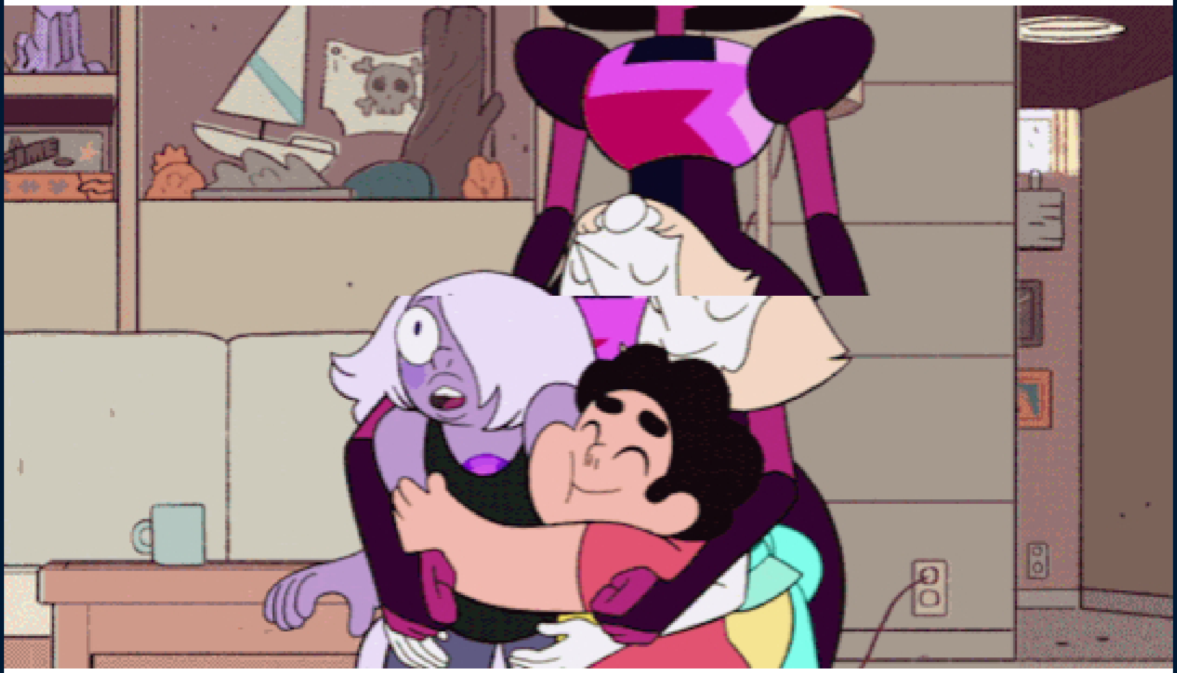
prismatic-bell

ALSO

If you pay attention to the Ghibli scenes, and also to some good American animation hugs, like this:



You're going to notice real human hugs don't work like that.

("Gems are aliens blah blah" they're humanoid, deal.)

Pearl's arms are WAY TOO LONG, in anatomical-accuracy terms. (And Garnet's are just fucking ridiculous.) Amethyst's arm briefly loses its bones. Pop back up to that spinny hug from what I think is Kiki's Delivery Service, and you'll notice the same thing about the boy's arms on both counts. Because that split second of inaccuracy tricks the eye, and helps you see the hug better! It doesn't matter that Pearl's arms are too long. It doesn't matter that the boy's elbows very very very briefly bend backward. What happens is this amazing conspiracy between animators and your eyes, so what they draw is "inaccurate" for a couple frames but your eyes see it as "BIG squish! Good hugs! Emotions, yes!" Even once you know it's there, it's hard to spot. And to be clear, this is NOT AN ERROR—it's animators using the fluidity of 2D animation to show you something.

3D animators can do this, but it's tougher because if you breathe wrong the render will just....destroy itself. I think it was Frozen where there's an outtake of a walk cycle that just decides, randomly, to turn into a Picasso painting because an animator tried to make the character do something tiny like blinking. And this is because Computers Are Like That Sometimes. (Ask video game devs. 999 times out of 1000, when you're like "huh! Why is there a random static tomato out-of-bounds here?" a member of the dev team will be like "yeah it put itself there and every time we tried to take out the tomato the program crashed so we just said fuck it and left it there.") Sometimes there just is no good way to make a 3D-rendered hug look real because trying to make the renders squish instead makes the renders look like eldritch horrors.

So you have multiple people trying to coordinate something that is FINICKY BULLSHIT and then you add computers, which are MORE FINICKY BULLSHIT, and then you add the fact that it's semi-realistic and a lot of the conventions of 2D animation just won't work (would you accept a speed smear in Moana? Or would it take you out of the moment?), and then you have to make it look decent on top of that before you ever even start worrying about the beats of the scene?

Yeah.

TL;dr, I assure you THEY ARE TRYING.

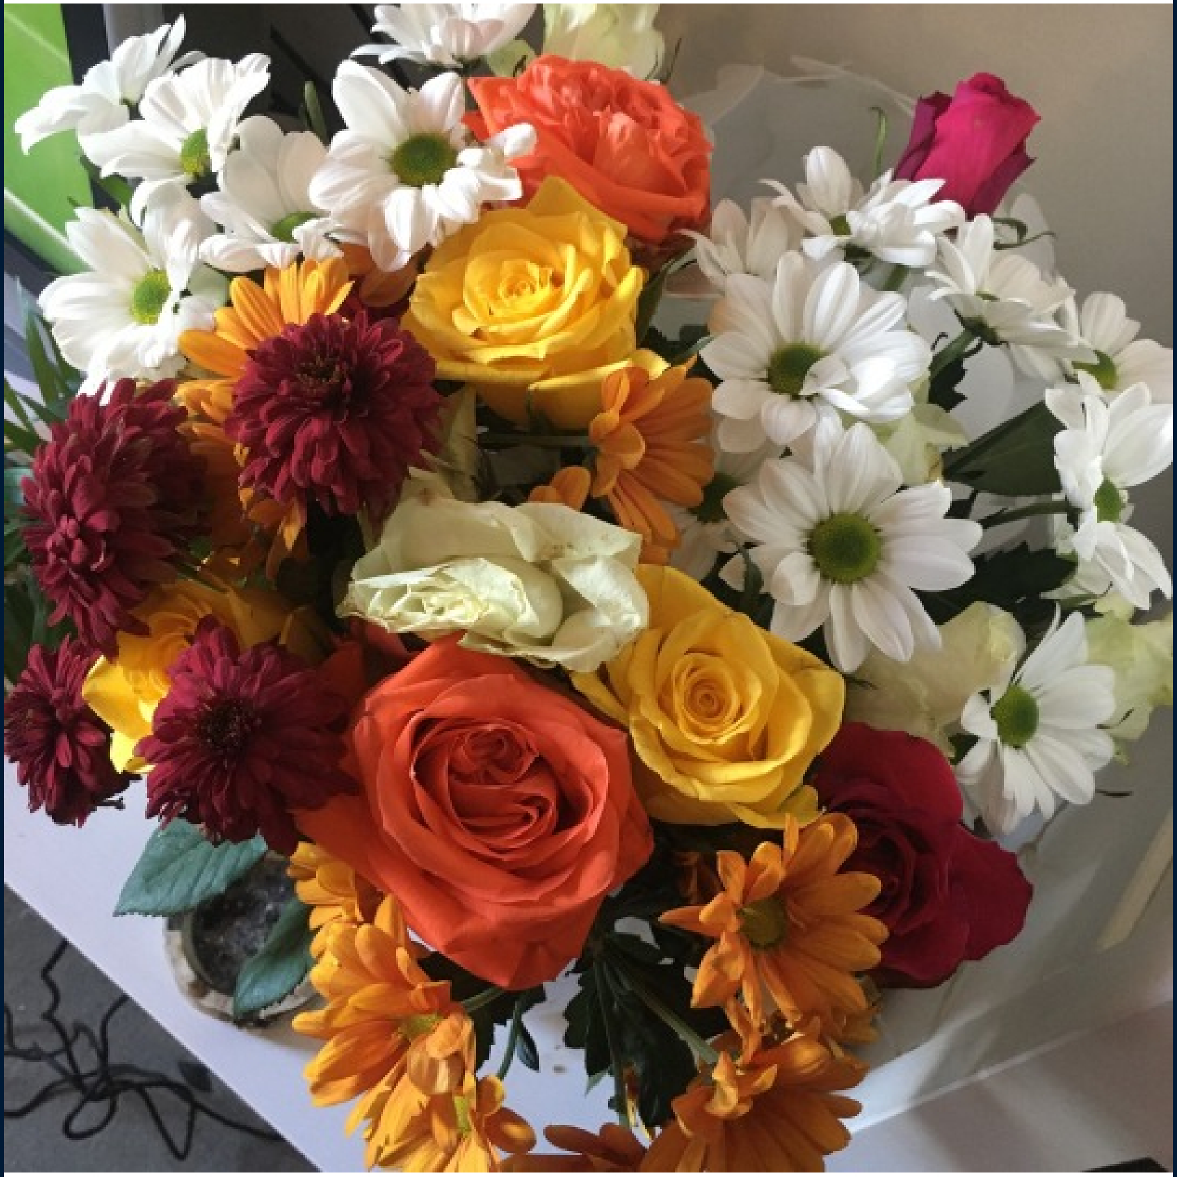
So a lot of people think cut/fresh flowers are really expensive or decadent, and that it's not worth buying them when they're at a reduced price because they'll die within about a day and it's still Too Expensive and like I just. I need to let you know that it isn't true and unless it's a super special occasion and you're going to an actual florist for an actual special bouquet you don't have to, nay shouldn't, pay full price for flowers ever.

I mean I can only really speak for the UK where you can get flowers in the grocery store which is naturally cheaper than a florist, and also where I always get mine, but the techniques apply to "anywhere one can obtain a bunch of flowers"

If you take care of your cut flowers - which don't worry isn't hard - the slightly sad looking slightly wilty half price ones will STILL last you two weeks.

Observe:



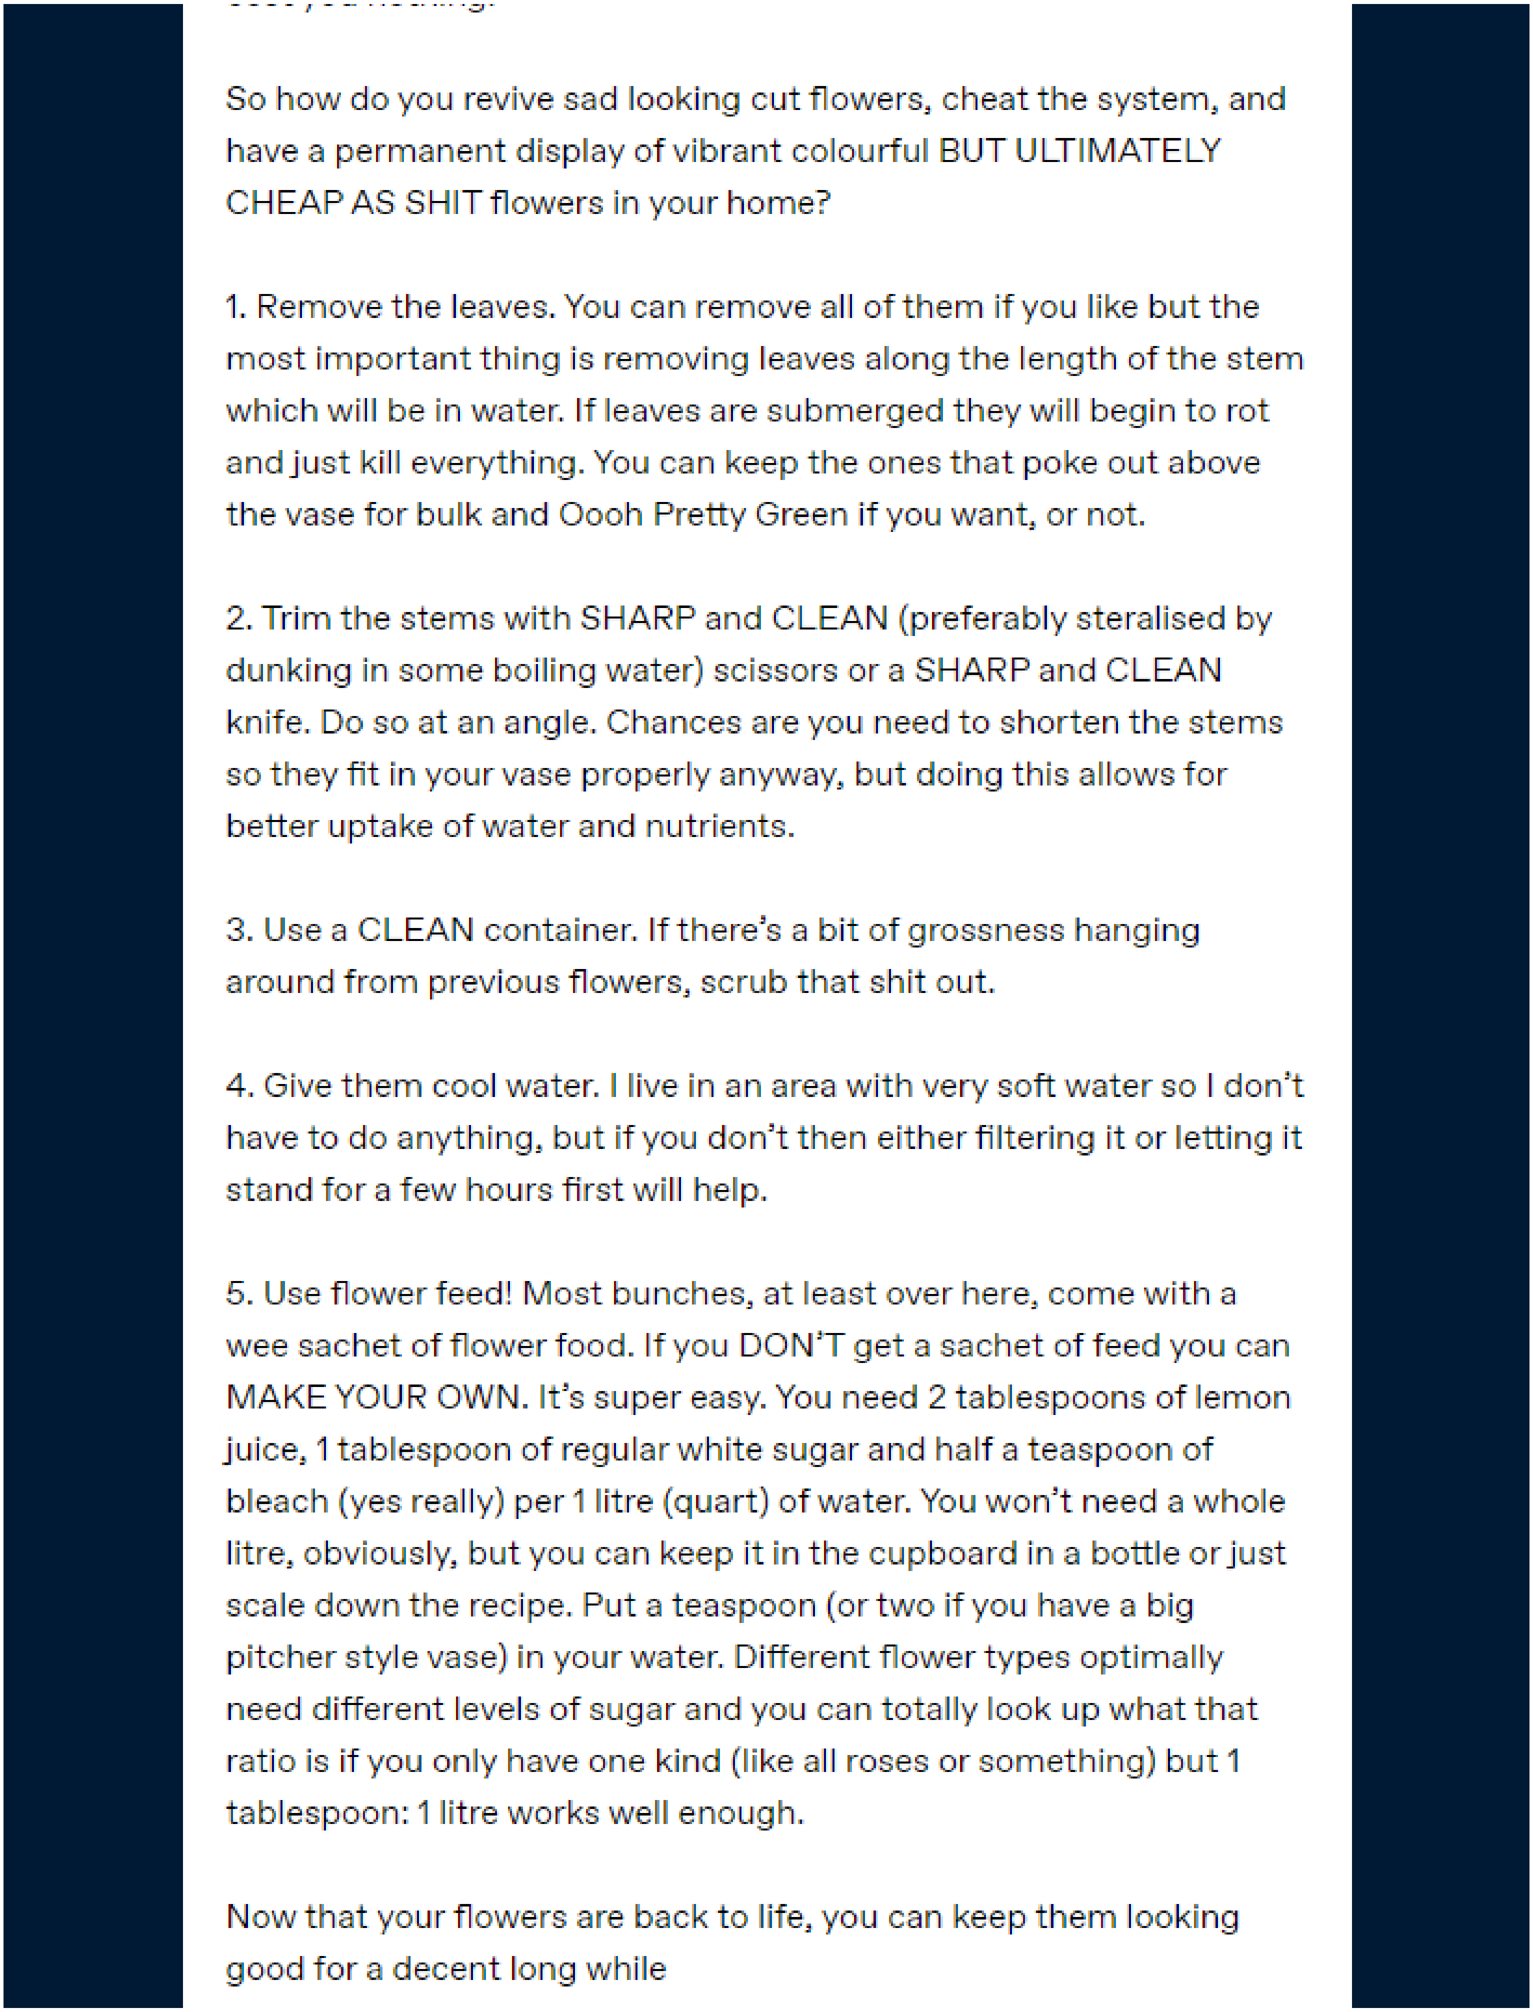
Everything in that vase except the dark red flowers and the ivory roses was purchased, half wilted, in the reduced bucket an ENTIRE WEEK ago. The dark reds and ivories? TWO WEEKS (I don't normally premade bouquets because they end up in the reduced less often and even when they do they're still more expensive than getting a few bunches of different types of flowers)

TWO. WEEKS. From a wilted half price "we are become death" state.

Here's what it looked like a whole entire week ago when I put the new flowers in:

(the big yellow bastard in the bottom left is also from the previous week)

I mean they've still "hardly wilted" now and if I was so inclined I could leave it another couple of days, but this is normally the point at which I remove them and put new flowers in the gaps. Also, cut off the heads and keep them for a bath. You'll feel So Fucking Fancy and it cost you nothing.



cost you nothing.

So how do you revive sad looking cut flowers, cheat the system, and have a permanent display of vibrant colourful BUT ULTIMATELY CHEAP AS SHIT flowers in your home?

1. Remove the leaves. You can remove all of them if you like but the most important thing is removing leaves along the length of the stem which will be in water. If leaves are submerged they will begin to rot and just kill everything. You can keep the ones that poke out above the vase for bulk and Oooh Pretty Green if you want, or not.

2. Trim the stems with SHARP and CLEAN (preferably steralised by dunking in some boiling water) scissors or a SHARP and CLEAN knife. Do so at an angle. Chances are you need to shorten the stems so they fit in your vase properly anyway, but doing this allows for better uptake of water and nutrients.

3. Use a CLEAN container. If there's a bit of grossness hanging around from previous flowers, scrub that shit out.

4. Give them cool water. I live in an area with very soft water so I don't have to do anything, but if you don't then either filtering it or letting it stand for a few hours first will help.

5. Use flower feed! Most bunches, at least over here, come with a wee sachet of flower food. If you DON'T get a sachet of feed you can MAKE YOUR OWN. It's super easy. You need 2 tablespoons of lemon juice, 1 tablespoon of regular white sugar and half a teaspoon of bleach (yes really) per 1 litre (quart) of water. You won't need a whole litre, obviously, but you can keep it in the cupboard in a bottle or just scale down the recipe. Put a teaspoon (or two if you have a big pitcher style vase) in your water. Different flower types optimally need different levels of sugar and you can totally look up what that ratio is if you only have one kind (like all roses or something) but 1 tablespoon: 1 litre works well enough.

Now that your flowers are back to life, you can keep them looking good for a decent long while

1. Remove dead/wilted heads either as and when you see them or just like once a week (I'm lazy, I just do it once a week)

2. Remove any leaves that are going the same way

3. Once a week, change out the water. Fish out any plant material that may have fallen in, rinse the container, put in new water and feed.

4. When you're doing the water change, give the stems another small trim. Only 1cm (half an inch) or so, unless the bottom of the stem is going pale and a bit limp looking, in which case lop off as much of that part as you can whilst still being able to fit them in the vase properly. If they end up noticably shorter than the others, just keep those ones to the outside of the arrangement OR put them in the middle and use the other flowers to keep them propped up within the water so they appear the same height.

5. Replace removed dead flowers with ones from your next cut-price bunch. That way you're a) keeping a perpetual but ever-changing bouquet and b) need to buy less flowers at once than just waiting for everything to die off and replacing the whole thing.

Cut flowers make me happy. I'm sure having a nice beautiful bunch of colourful flowers in your room makes you happy too, and you absolutely don't need to spend a fortune to make that happen.

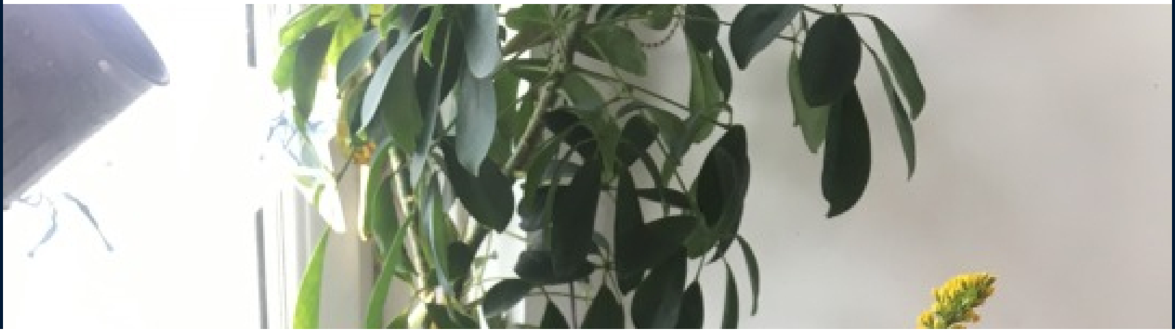
somecunttookmyurl

Can't believe this has over 1000 notes anyway here's my current "dying" flowers



bomberqueen17 Follow

From a sometimes flower-farmer who harvests and arranges bouquets for the farmer's market, a couple more tips, especially if you pick your own flowers–

FRIDGE. "Conditioned" flowers sold at the farmer's market? They last longer because they've been held overnight in a fridge. That's it. We have a big walk-in cooler we put our harvests into, and once we've arranged the bouquets, they go in there. For a while we were doing all our harvests on Friday morning, arranging Friday afternoon, refrigerating the finished bouquets, and selling them Saturday, but the leftover flowers we were bringing straight into the house without refrigeration. The bouquets we sold at market lasted a week easily, but the ones we brought inside were dead by Thursday. Why? Fridge. They'd never been conditioned. So now we know– condition even the bouquets that don't make the cut and stay home!

So if you have a nice fridge that's not crammed full and has some air circulation in it and doesn't get too cold? Consider popping them in there overnight just to perk them up. (Also, do your harvesting in the morning, if possible, for your own bouquets.)

Display them on a surface away from direct sunlight. Don't let them get too hot.

And consider drying flowers! Look it up or just experiment, some dry beautifully, and then you can have some out-of-season color without needing to rely on flown-in blooms.

Oh yes good shout on the fridge! I forget that one because I myself have a tiny wee under-the-counter fridge, and have for years, so I can't do that with mine and just don't think about it anymore.

Also thanks for reminding me that it's wildflower season now. I might go down to the river this week and grab some stuff.

Obligatory "current flowers" addition

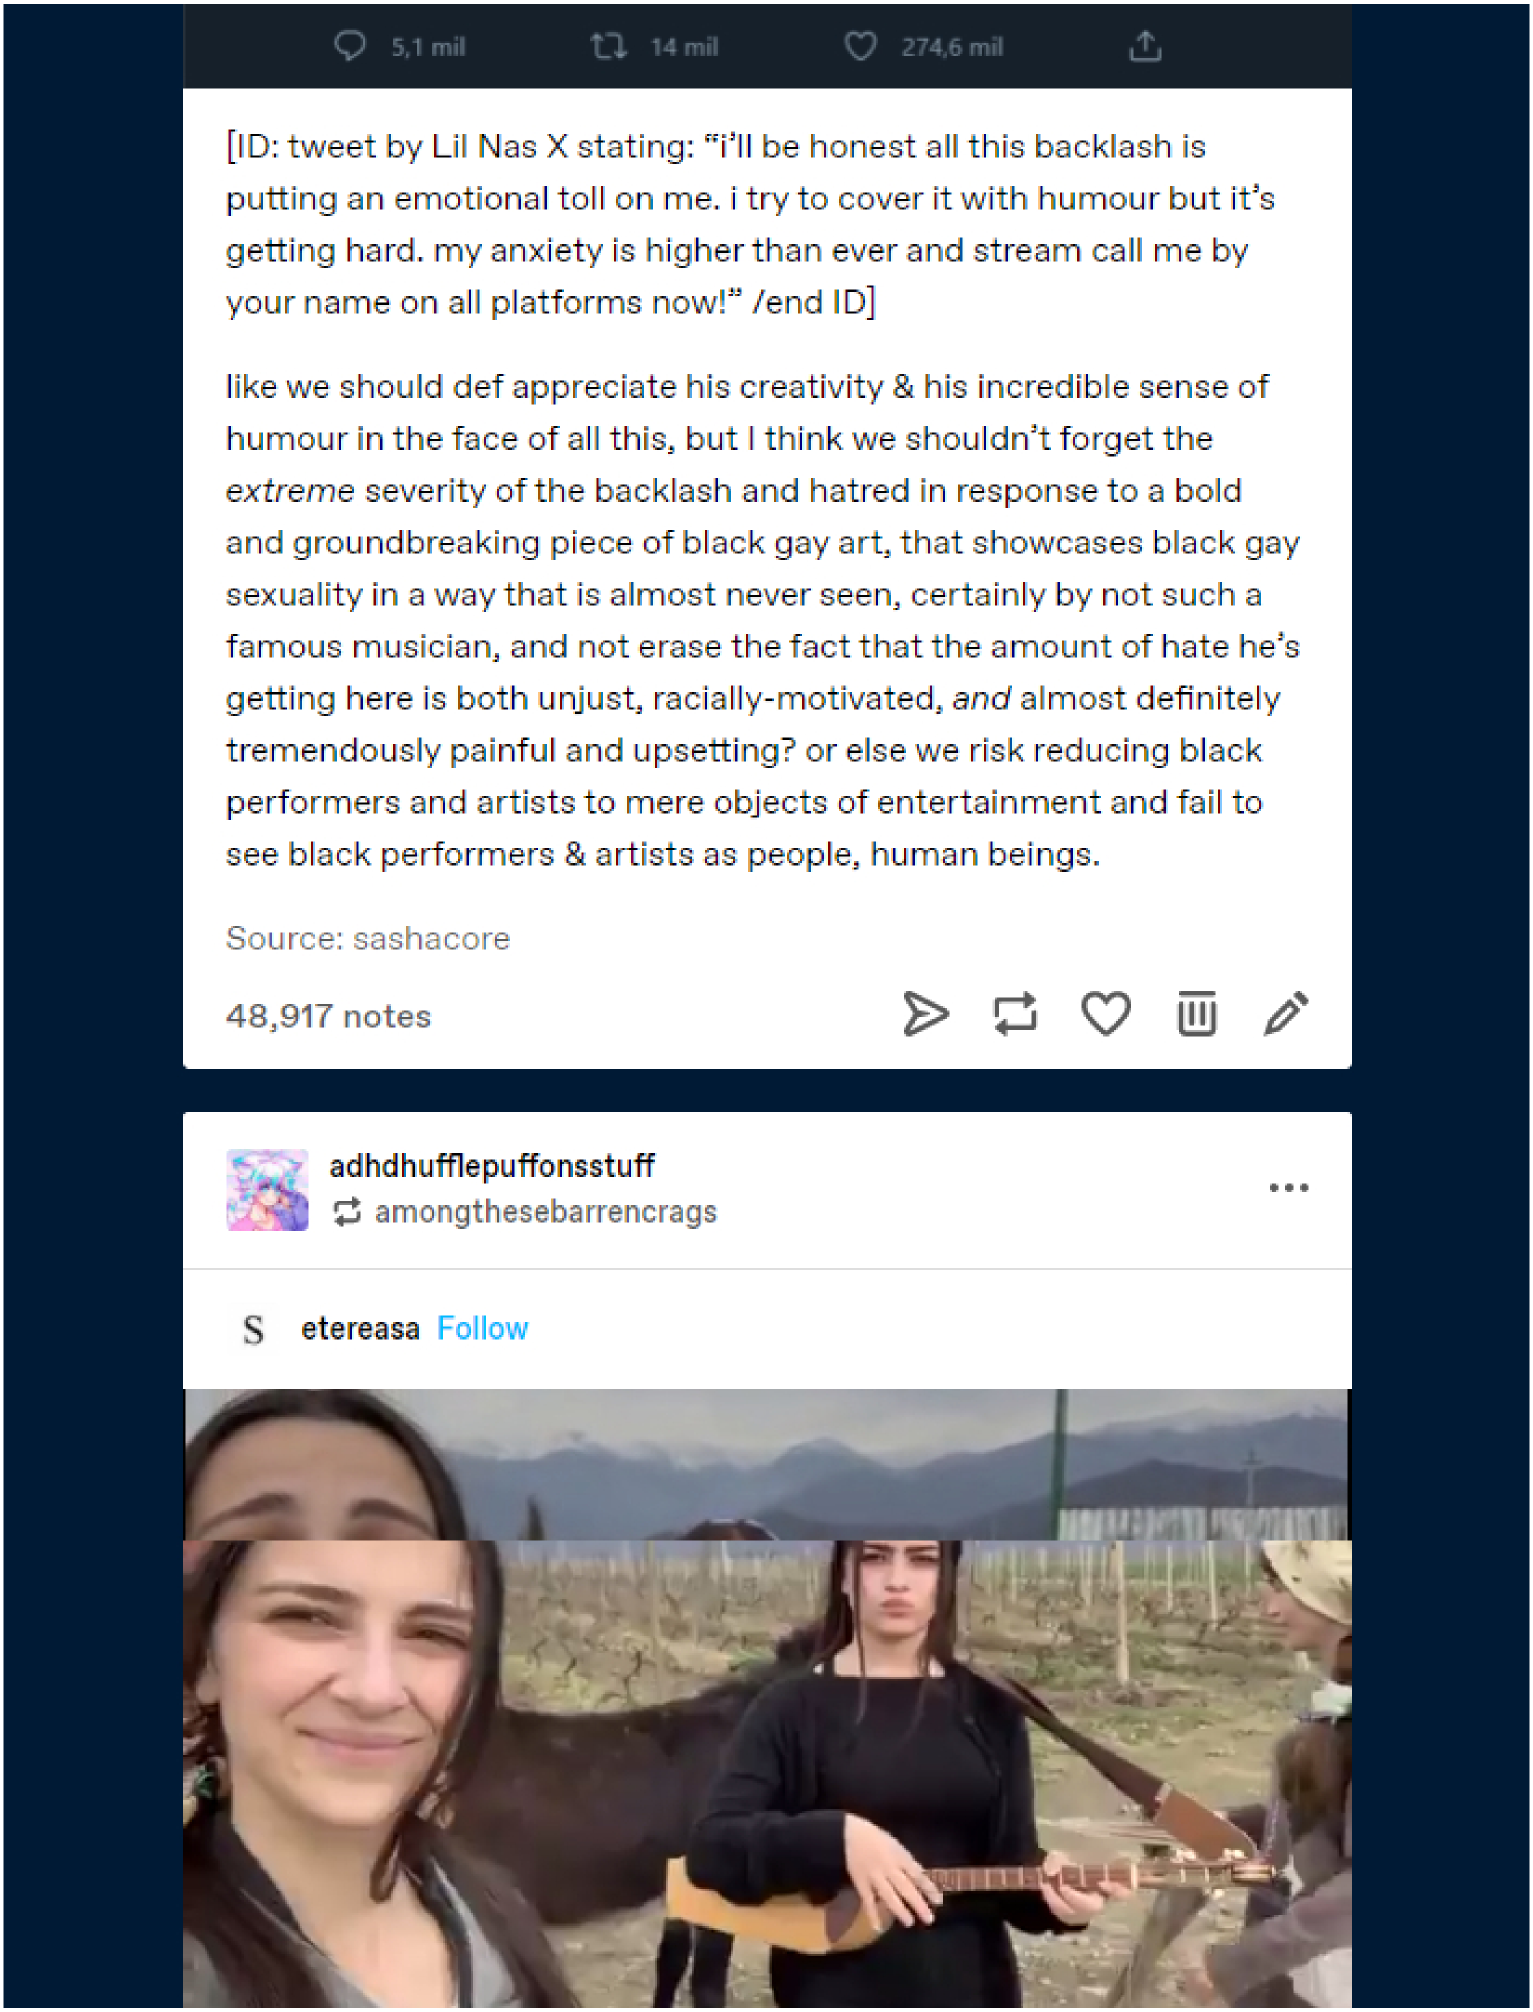
I think like, while Lil Nas X is tearing apart a lot of troll responses he’s getting on twitter for laughs on purpose, I also definitely think we should be careful about how we frame that, how we repost that, and whether that’s the thing we focus on here, because the sheer volume and maliciousness of the harassment (from the likes of Fox News and establishments such as that) he’s receiving isn’t without emotional consequences. he even stated that much:

nope @LilNasX · 29 mar.
i’ll be honest all this backlash is putting an emotional toll on me. i try to cover it with humor but it’s getting hard. my anxiety is higher than ever and stream call me by your name on all platforms now!



[ID: tweet by Lil Nas X stating: “i’ll be honest all this backlash is putting an emotional toll on me. i try to cover it with humour but it’s getting hard. my anxiety is higher than ever and stream call me by your name on all platforms now!” /end ID] like we should def appreciate his creativity & his incredible sense of humour in the face of all this, but I think we shouldn’t forget the extreme severity of the backlash and hatred in response to a bold and groundbreaking piece of black gay art, that showcases black gay sexuality in a way that is almost never seen, certainly by not such a famous musician, and not erase the fact that the amount of hate he’s getting here is both unjust, racially-motivated, and almost definitely tremendously painful and upsetting? or else we risk reducing black performers and artists to mere objects of entertainment and fail to see black performers & artists as people, human beings.

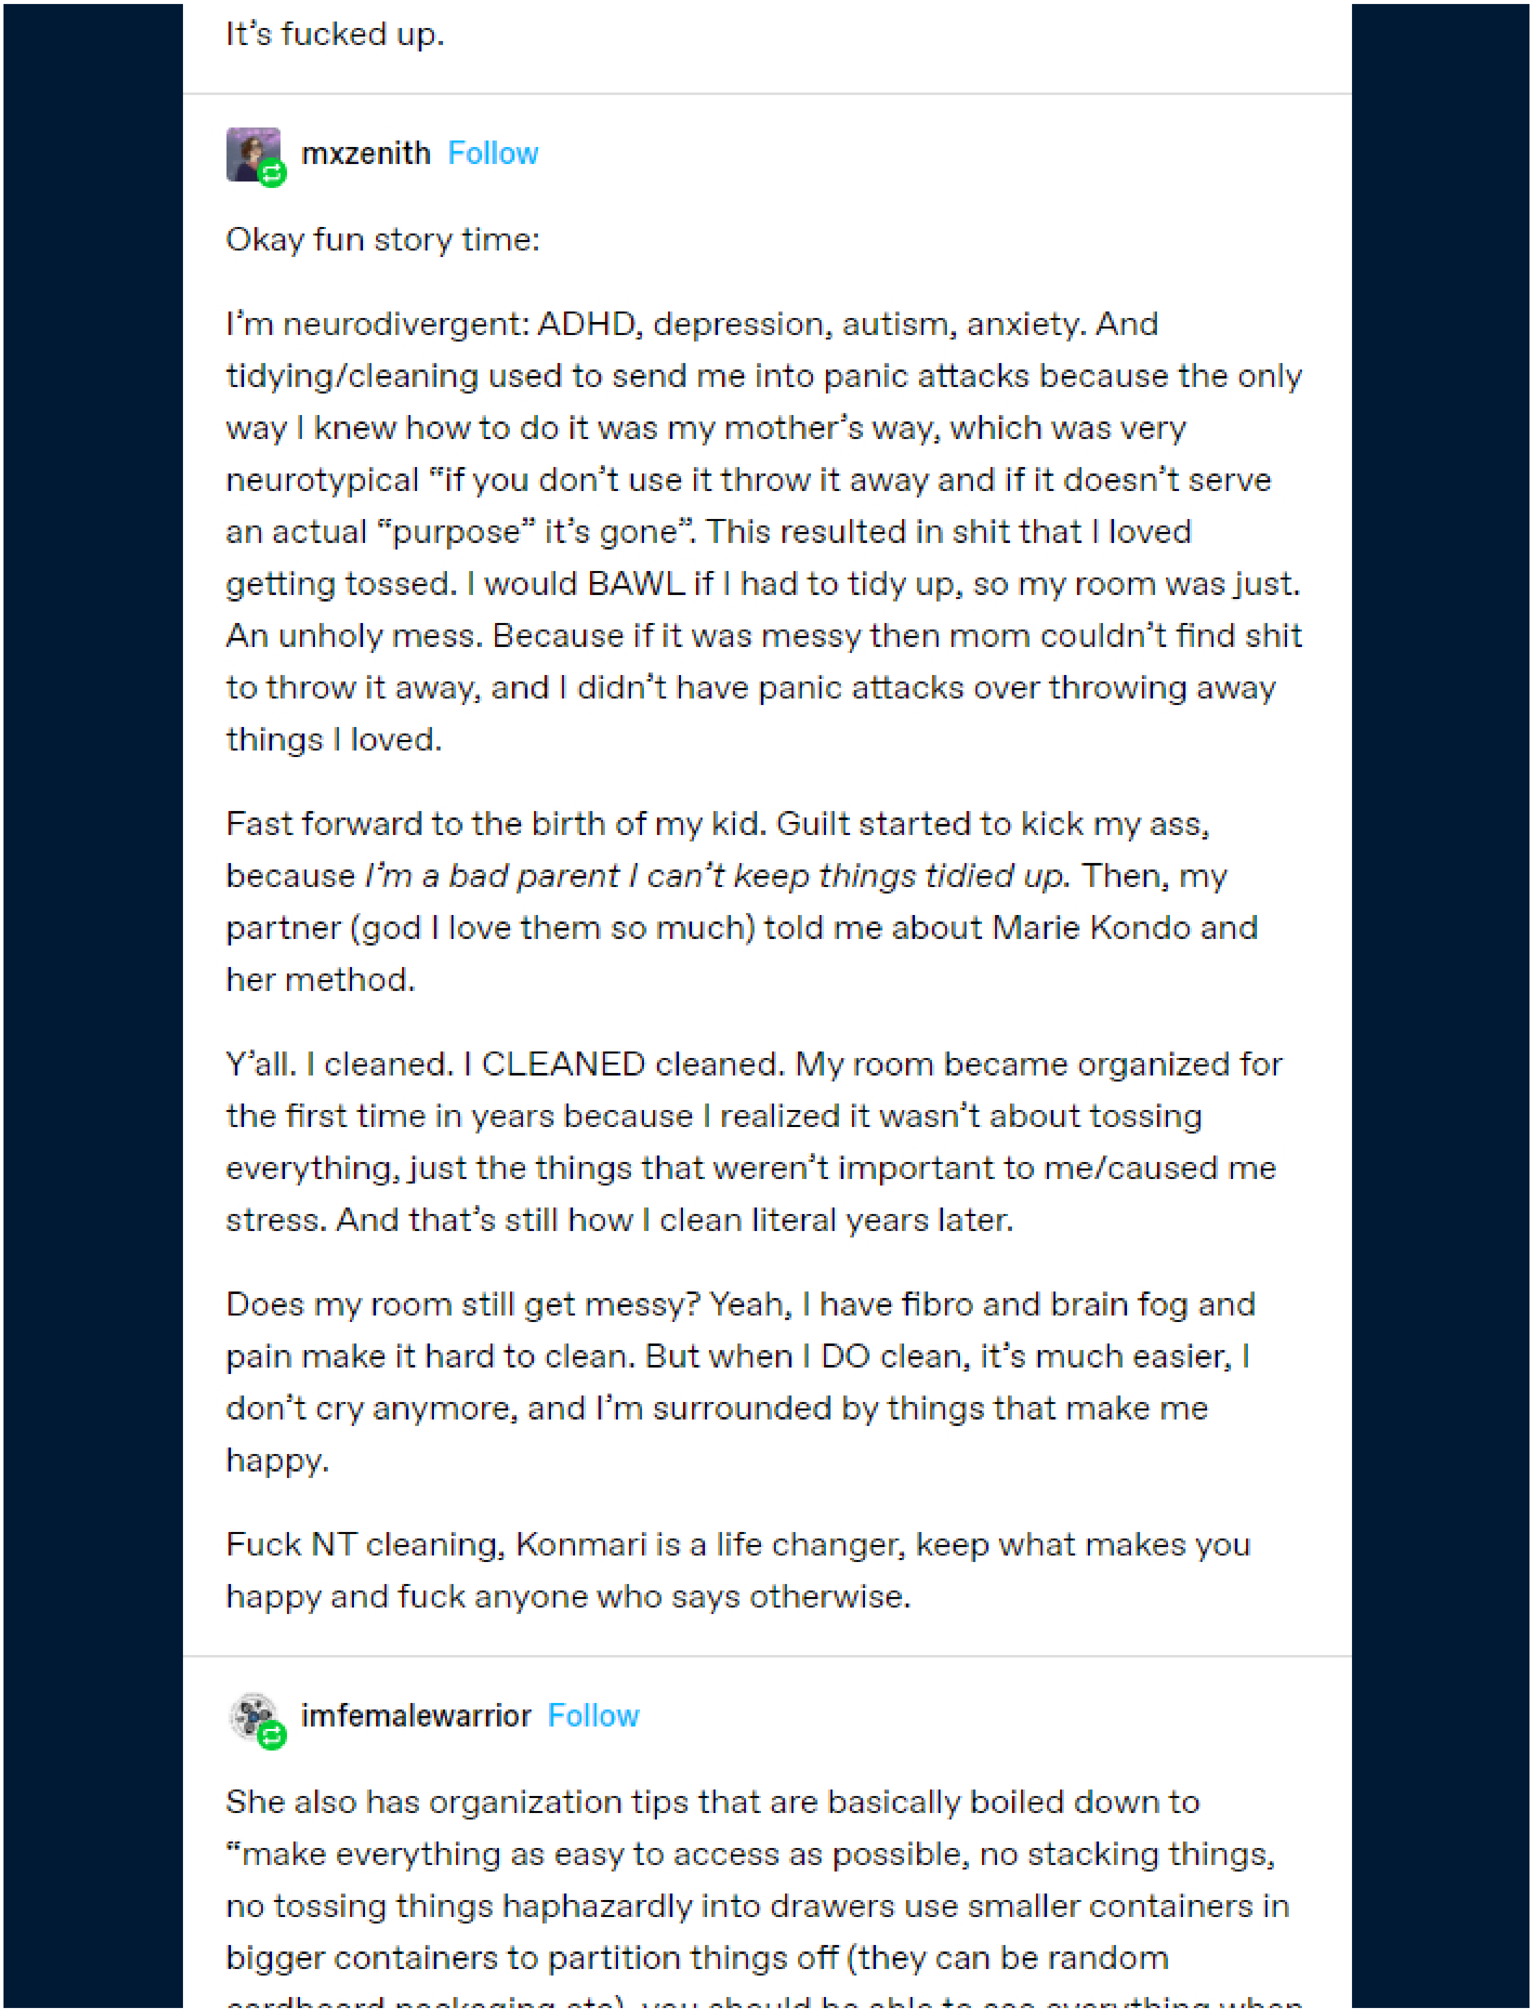
Marie Kondo is full of anecdotes about the weird ass shit that she not only lets people keep but encourages them to elevate in their lives. She says one of her clients ended the process with a bedroom full of vintage pinball machines because what sparks joy in that particular woman was basically sleeping in the middle of an arcade.

Marie Kondo would never make you throw away your weird shit! She wants you to pare down to just your weird shit.

thebaconsandwichofregret Follow

It pisses me off that for YEARS tidying up shows were full of white neurotypicals shaming neurodivergent people for having more than an arbitrary number of possessions and forcing them to go through a traumatic process of throwing away so much of their stuff to fit other people's standards of "this is how you should live your life" and everyone thought those were fine!

But then in comes this sweet little Japanese lady who says the only rule is how can we make the client's life happier and less stressful? How can we help them prioritize the things they enjoy being around? Marie Kondo came up with a process that accommodates and respects obsessions and special interests. And people treat her like the devil incarnate.



It's fucked up.

mxzenith Follow

Okay fun story time:

I'm neurodivergent: ADHD, depression, autism, anxiety. And tidying/cleaning used to send me into panic attacks because the only way I knew how to do it was my mother's way, which was very neurotypical "if you don't use it throw it away and if it doesn't serve an actual "purpose" it's gone". This resulted in shit that I loved getting tossed. I would BAWL if I had to tidy up, so my room was just. An unholy mess. Because if it was messy then mom couldn't find shit to throw it away, and I didn't have panic attacks over throwing away things I loved.

Fast forward to the birth of my kid. Guilt started to kick my ass, because I'm a bad parent I can't keep things tidied up. Then, my partner (god I love them so much) told me about Marie Kondo and her method.

Y'all. I cleaned. I CLEANED cleaned. My room became organized for the first time in years because I realized it wasn't about tossing everything, just the things that weren't important to me/caused me stress. And that's still how I clean literal years later.

Does my room still get messy? Yeah, I have fibro and brain fog and pain make it hard to clean. But when I DO clean, it's much easier, I don't cry anymore, and I'm surrounded by things that make me happy.

Fuck NT cleaning, Konmari is a life changer, keep what makes you happy and fuck anyone who says otherwise.

imfemalewarrior Follow

She also has organization tips that are basically boiled down to "make everything as easy to access as possible, no stacking things, no tossing things haphazardly into drawers use smaller containers in bigger containers to partition things off (they can be random cardboard packaging etc), you should be able to see everything when cardboard packaging etc), you should be able to see everything when you open a drawer or cabinet or what have you, put things where you need them and if that means your shoes are in the kitchen then the shoes belong in the kitchen, if that means granola bars are on the night stand then the granola bars are on the night stand (preferably in their package or in a basket or jar that also sparks joy)"

Coincidentally a lot of these are also tips for people with adhd "everything needs to be visible or it doesn't exist" (i can relate) and other neurodivergent brains (is that the right way to say it???? Genuinely asking, or is it neurodivergents, or neurodivergent ppl or neurodivergencies?) Her whole method is about respecting and caring for what you own and what makes you happy, reframing your perspective towards things you actually need but stress you out (watch her interview with colbert or minhaj to see what I mean), and most importantly respecting and working with the client by giving them a guide and then gently encouraging them to complete her method with very little interference on her part

California condors to return to Northwest skies after 100-year absence

The Yurok Tribe of Northern California has worked for decades to return California condors to the Pacific Northwest. They hope to release their first birds this fall.

Final rule makes way for California condors’ return to Yurok Country

By THE TIMES-STANDARD |
PUBLISHED: March 23, 2021 at 11:10 a.m.

After a century of absence, condors are returning to Yurok Country.

The Yurok Tribe, National Park Service and the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife announced Tuesday a final rule that will help in the creation of a California condor release facility in Yurok ancestral lands and Redwood National Park.

“For the last 20 years, the Yurok Tribe has been actively engaged in the restoration of the rivers, forests and prairies in our ancestral territory. The reintroduction of the condor is one component of this effort to reconstruct the diverse environmental conditions that once existed in our region,” Yurok Chairman Joseph L. James said in a release. “We are extremely proud of the fact that our future generations will not know a world without prey-go-neesh.”

In the second panel, we once again see the person with short hair and glasses, looking more serious as the person with curly hair answers: "Oh they were just telling me ab—" The word "they" is highlighted.

The last panel is a close-up of the short-haired person. They are smiling and blushing, their eyes watering with tears of happiness, with one hand on their heart and one hand on their chin. how to do better at

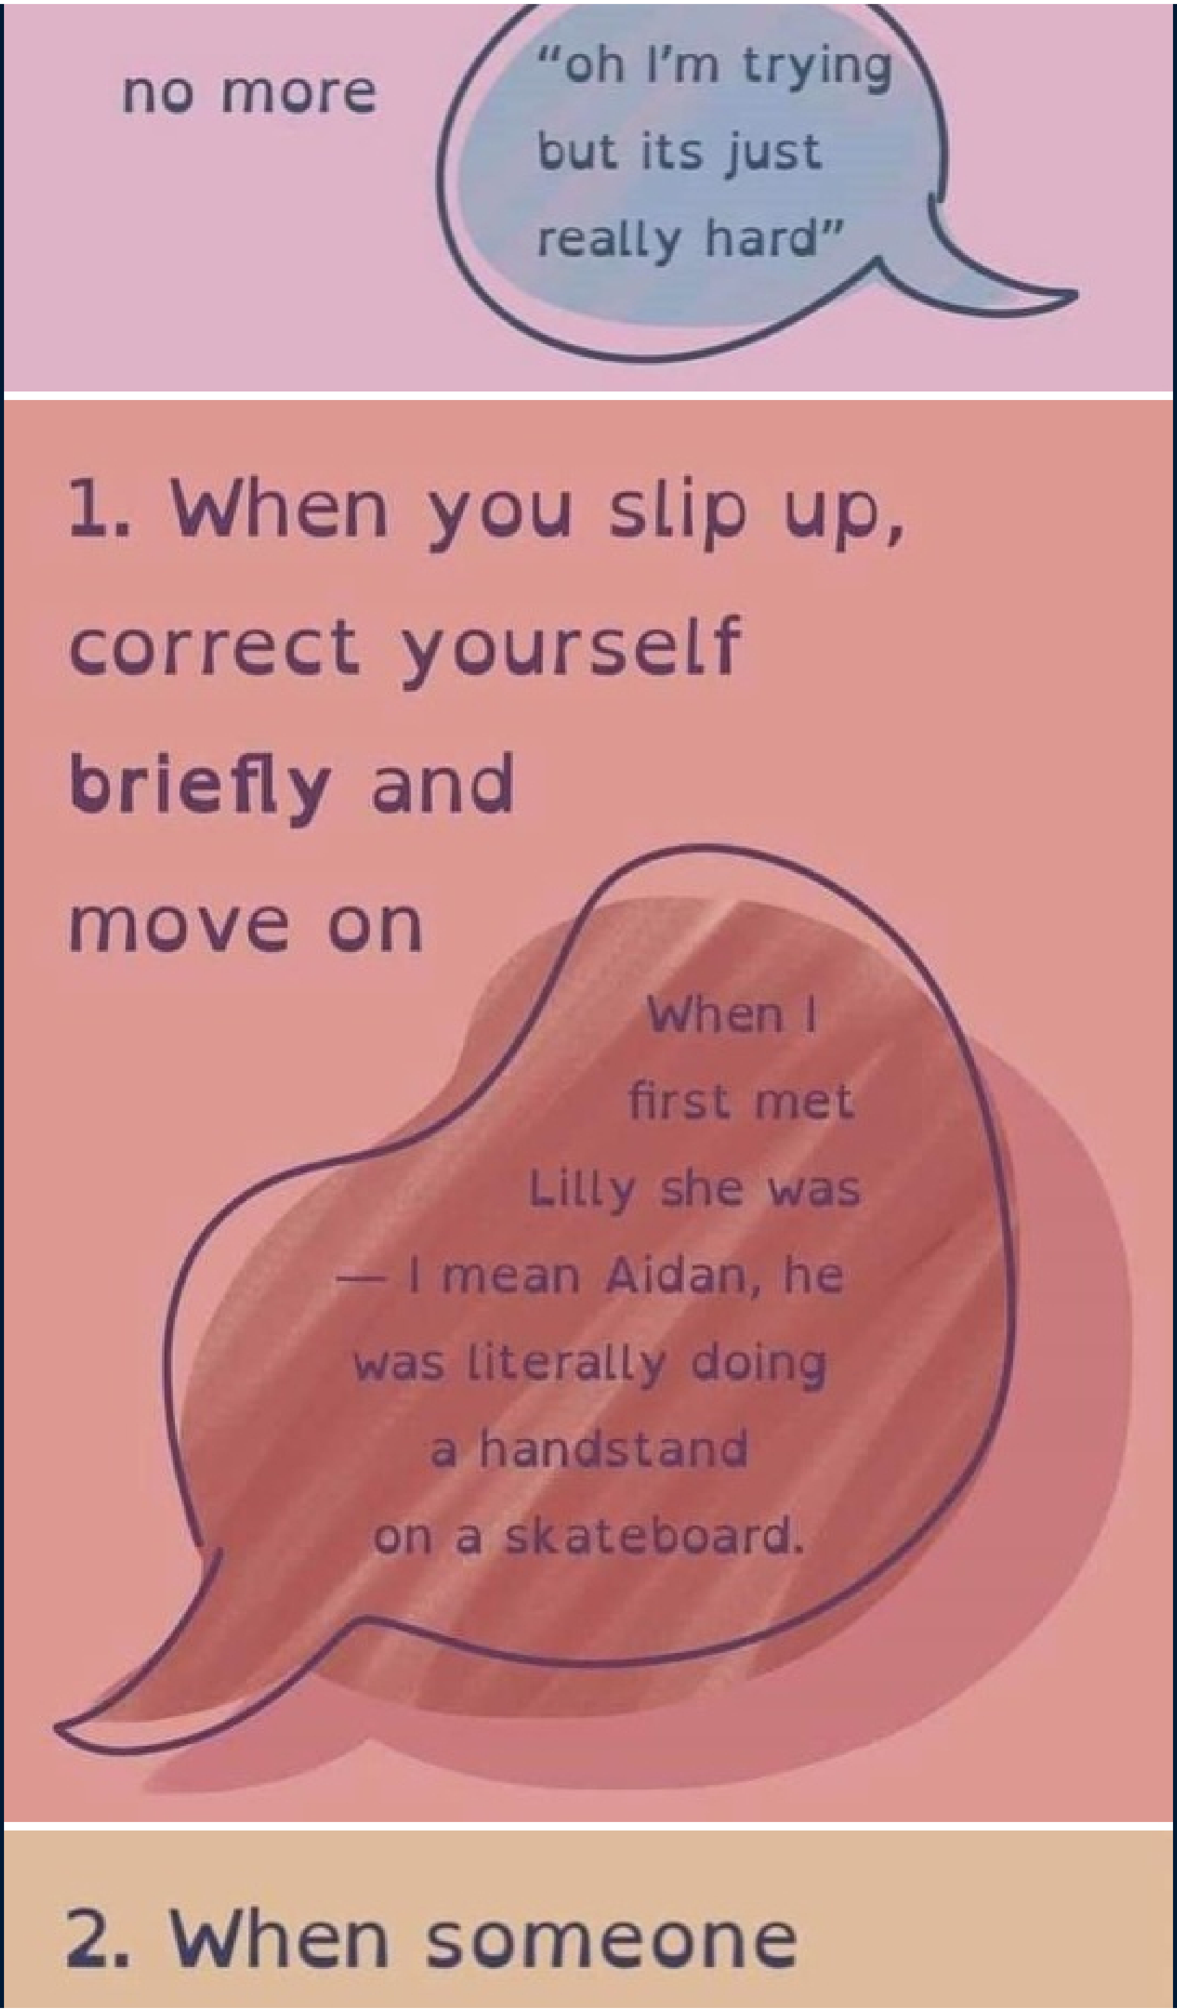
Getting

New Pronouns

Right



no more

"oh I'm trying but its just really hard"

1. When you slip up, correct yourself briefly and move on

When I first met Lilly she was — I mean Aidan, he was literally doing a handstand on a skateboard.

2. When someone corrects you, say “thank you” and just move on swiftly

I hadn’t even finished yet and he already — they right, thanks! they had already gotten 8 ready !?!

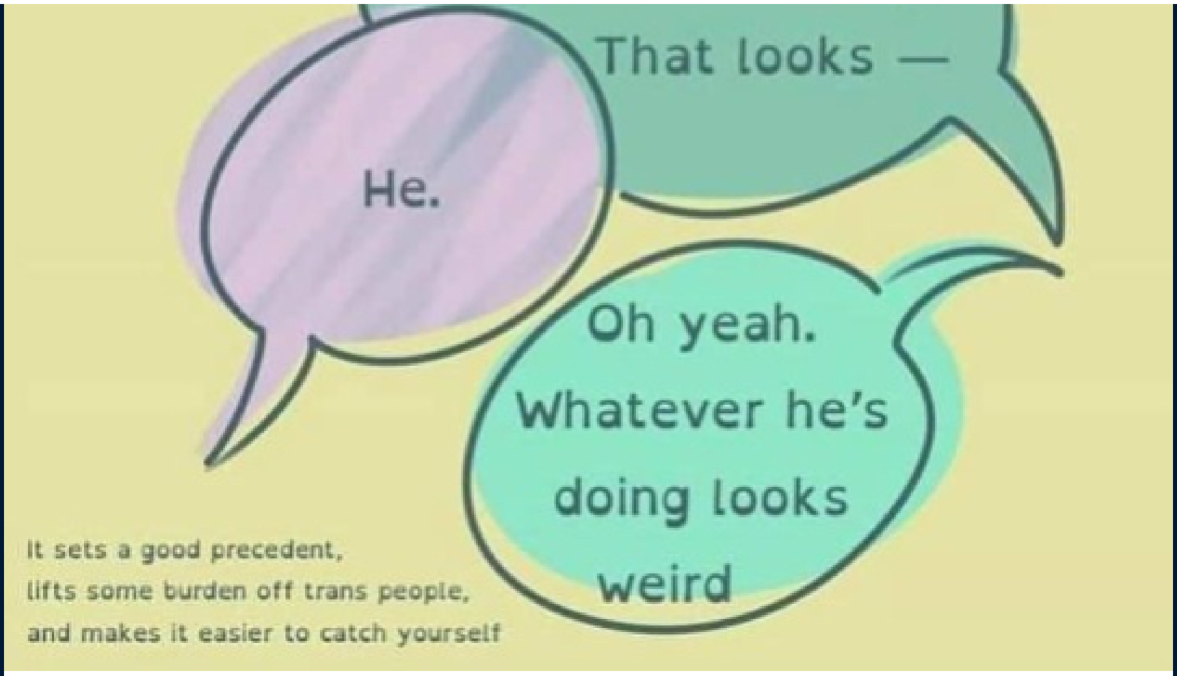
3. Get in the habit of interrupting people with a quick correction

yes,
every time

What is she doing?



That looks —
He.
Oh yeah. Whatever he's doing looks weird

It sets a good precedent, lifts some burden off trans people,
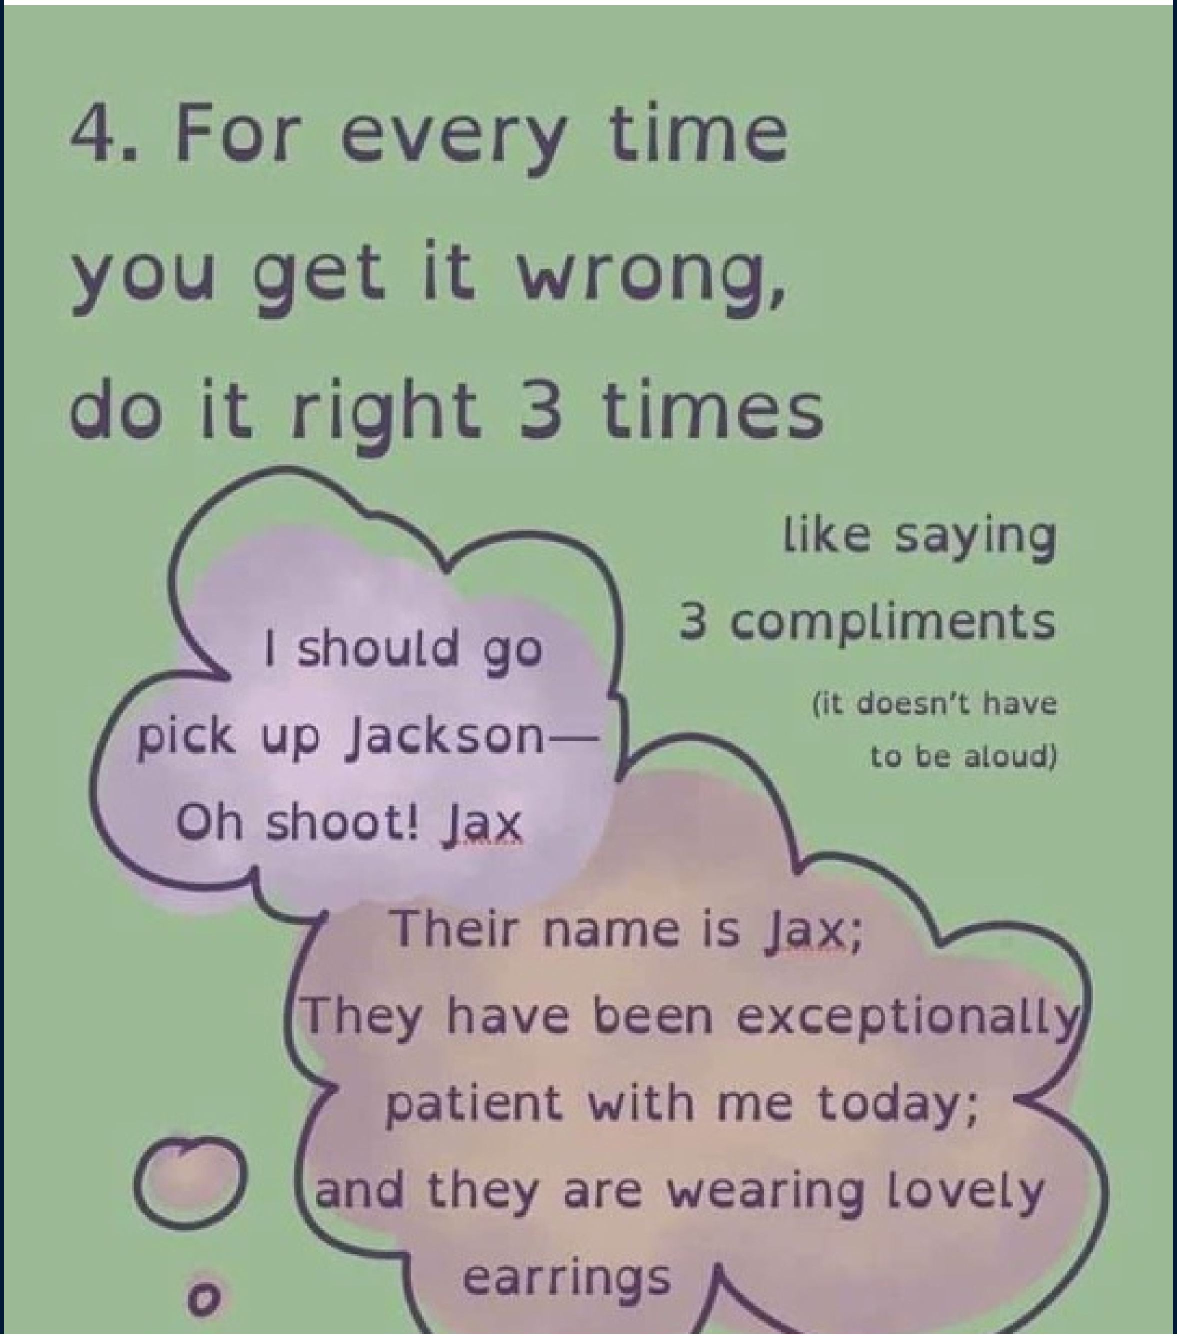
and makes it easier to catch yourself



4. For every time you get it wrong, do it right 3 times like saying 3 compliments (it doesn't have to be aloud)

I should go pick up Jackson— Oh shoot! Jax
Their name is Jax; They have been exceptionally patient with me today; and they are wearing lovely earrings

5. Consider meeting with someone to practice

Go for coffee with a mutual friend and correct each other until you get it

So her pronouns are they/them — Wait their pronouns Totally!
We really have to practice, so we can get this right for them

6. Don't make anyone feel like a burden for having pronouns you're struggling with

do not say
"oh it's just really hard"

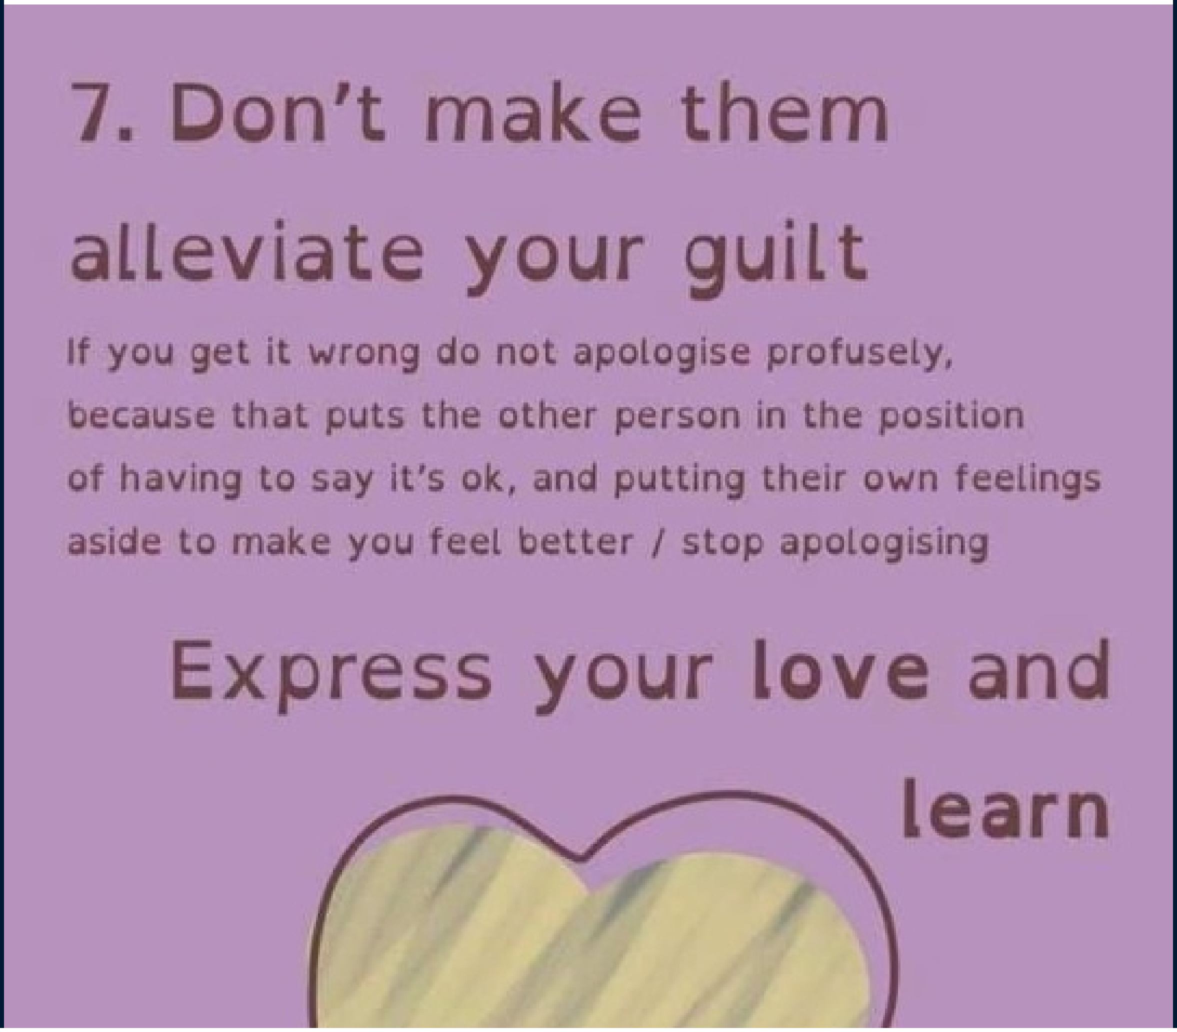
Thank you for sharing your authentic self with me, I'm learning and I really appreciate it



7. Don't make them alleviate your guilt

If you get it wrong do not apologise profusely, because that puts the other person in the position of having to say it's ok, and putting their own feelings aside to make you feel better / stop apologising

Express your love and learn

You know, there are some days that really, negative reviews or comments on your work can break you as a writer, really hurt you, then someone decides to go overboard and attack you over and over for the most ridiculous things and magically, it no longer is at risk of hurting your feelings but skips straight to making you laugh at how they are commenting chapter after chapter and trying to pull you down but yet they are still reading and that's fucking hilarious. Why are you still reading if you hate it so much? Why do tell me that you want to report it because you don't feel the triggers are adequate? It went from hurtful to just ridiculous.
